

Residents committees and organisations

As a resident in a residential land lease community you have rights under the Residential (Land Lease) Communities Act 2013 and Residential (Land Lease) Communities Regulation 2015.

This factsheet explains the law in NSW regarding residents committees and organisations. The information applies to both home owners and tenants.

Residents committees

Residents of a community can establish a residents committee. A majority of residents at a meeting to which all residents of the community have been invited must agree to the establishment of a committee.

There can only be one residents committee for a community at any time. If more than one body or committee claims to be the residents committee, the operator or any resident of the community can apply to the NSW Civil and Administrative Tribunal (NCAT) to determine which one is the actual committee for the community.

Residents committees represent the interests of all residents. The main functions of the committee are to consult regularly with residents or operator, or both, about:

- the day-to-day running of the community, and
- any resident's complaint or proposal regarding the operation of the community

Committees are also able to call meetings of all residents to consider and vote on anything affecting a community.

Committee members are elected by a majority of residents at a meeting. The committee members must be residents of the community who are at least 18 years old.

A committee member can only hold office for one year and must then stand for re-election.

A residents committee can:

- determine its own procedure
- form one or more sub-committees and determine each sub-committee's procedure
- adopt and vary a constitution

Operators and residents committees

If requested by the committee, the operator must provide a list of the names of all current residents of the community, including their site numbers and postal addresses (if different to their sites).

Operators and close associates of the operator cannot be members of a residents committee. An operator must not:

- discourage or prevent the establishment of a residents committee
- obstruct a residents committee in carrying out its functions
- prevent the residents committee from using community facilities that are generally available to residents
- require the committee to be incorporated or to take out any form of insurance

Membership of organisations

Residents have the right to belong to any organisation and the operator must not unreasonably interfere with that right.
