

Selling your home

As a home owner in a residential land lease community you have rights under the Residential (Land Lease) Communities Act 2013 and Residential (Land Lease) Communities Regulation 2015.

This factsheet explains the law in NSW regarding the sale of your home.

The Residential (Land Lease) Communities Act 2013 (the Act) gives you the right to sell your home on site. This right applies to:

- current home owners
- home owners who have left the community but still own a home, and
- an executor, administrator or beneficiary of the estate of a deceased home owner.

If you have a site agreement signed under an earlier Act that restricts, or prohibits on site sales, those restrictions no longer apply. Since commencement of the Act all home owners have the right to sell their home on site.

You must provide the operator of the community with a notice of intention to offer your home for sale before putting it on the market.

Once you have given the operator a notice of your intention to sell, you are entitled to display a 'for sale' sign in or on your home. You cannot display a 'for sale' sign anywhere else in the community without the operator's consent.

Selling agents and agreements

You are entitled to sell the home yourself or you can appoint a selling agent of your choice. This can be the operator or another person. The operator cannot require you to appoint them or any other person as your agent.

You can be required to pay commission and incidental expenses to the agent in connection with the sale of your home. However, you are not required to pay unless there is a written selling agency agreement between you and the agent that sets out how much you have to pay or how the charges will be calculated and what the agent will do in return for payment. The agreement must be entered before the home is sold.

You, the operator or the selling agent, can take disputes about incidental expenses and commission to the NSW Civil and Administrative Tribunal (NCAT). The application must be made within 28 days of the dispute.

Interference with sale

The operator of a community must not cause or permit any interference with your right to sell on site, or to display a 'for sale' sign on your home. Interference includes:

- unreasonably restricting prospective purchasers from inspecting your home or the community
- making false or misleading statements about the community
- taking any action to require you to comply with any requirement under the Local Government Act 1993 after becoming aware that you intend to sell your home.

If the operator interferes with your right to sell on site you can make an application to NCAT. The application must be made within 28 days of the interference occurring. NCAT can make orders to prevent further interference and can also order the operator to pay compensation to you.

Assignment and new site agreements

When you sell your home you have the right to assign your site agreement to the purchaser. You need the operators permission in writing but they cannot unreasonably withhold consent. If the operator refuses to agree to the assignment you can make an application to NCAT.

Assignment enables the purchaser to take over your site agreement on exactly the same terms that you had. This means that the operator cannot for example charge them higher site fees than you were paying at the time you sold the home.

If a site agreement is not assigned then the buyer must seek to enter into a new site agreement with the operator. A new site agreement may have different terms to your agreement but site fees must be set at fair market value. Fair market value is the higher of:

- the site fees currently paid by you, or
- the site fees payable for sites of a similar size in a similar location to your site.

Disputes about the terms of a new agreement, including the level of site fees can be taken to NCAT. The application must be made within 28 days of the dispute.
